What Textual Details Reveal About a Character

What Textual Details Reveal About a Character

Unit 4 returns to short fiction with a much larger toolkit. Its two most valuable additions are narrative distance and the idea that choices reveal values.

- The significance of characters is often revealed through their agency 能动性 and through nuanced descriptions.
- Characters' choices – in speech, action, and inaction – reveal what they value 揭示其所看重之物.

That second statement is the most practical sentence in the whole course for essay-writing.

Whenever you need a claim about a character, look at a choice and ask what it must be true for that choice to have made sense to them.

The Function of Contrasting Characters

The Function of Contrasting Characters

The word may is doing careful work. An antagonist is not necessarily a villain; the strongest antagonists hold a value the reader can also recognise as good, which is why the conflict is a conflict rather than a rout.

- The main character is the protagonist 主人公; the antagonist 对立者 opposes them.
- Protagonists and antagonists may represent contrasting values.

What a setting is doing

Mood and atmosphere

A setting may help establish the mood and atmosphere – the feeling a reader carries into what happens there.

Character

A setting can reveal the character who lives in it, or resists it – the room described through the eyes that see it.

Conflict

A hostile place makes an antagonist of the world itself, and can stand in for the pressure a character is under.

Change

When the setting shifts, ask whether the character has – and whether the text means the two to be read together.

Setting is a choice, not a backdrop. The question is always: what does the story gain by happening here?

A foil needs the shared half

The contrast reveals nothing without the shared half. Name what the two have in common first, or the difference is just two descriptions

3

Nuances in Characters' Relationships

Nuances in Characters' Relationships

This is Unit 3's definition applied to relationships.

Two characters in a long-running disagreement usually disagree about something prior to the argument they are having.

4

The Function of Setting in a Narrative

The Function of Setting in a Narrative

Mood is the reader's feeling; atmosphere is the quality the text creates around events.

Both are produced by selection – which details of a place the text mentions, and which it does not.

Setting, value systems, and narrative distance conflict among characters

often arises from tensions generated by their different value systems 价值体系

character and setting the environment a character inhabits provides information about that character

a setting may establish the mood and atmosphere as well as the place

narrative distance

how far the narrating voice stands from the experiencing self

why it matters

the most powerful and least-used tool in this course – a narrator recounting childhood forty years on knows what the child did not coherence 连贯性

occurs at several levels – within a sentence, between sentences, across the essay

When a narrator and their younger self are both present, the gap between them is usually the text's subject. Name the distance and the reading follows.

Setting does four jobs

CONTEXT — it tells you what is normal here, so a departure can register

MIRROR — it carries the feeling the character will not state

CONSTRAINT — it limits what this character is able to do

ANTAGONIST — it is the thing being struggled against

The bottom row does plot work. A setting that constrains or opposes is not scenery, and saying so is a claim rather than a description

5

The Relationship Between Character and Setting

The Relationship Between Character and Setting

This is a second route into character that avoids the trap of psychologising.

A room described through its neglect, its order, or its borrowed furniture tells you about the person who lives there, and it is textual evidence rather than speculation.

6

How Plot Orders Events

How Plot Orders Events

Some patterns in dramatic situations are so common that they are considered archetypes 原型, and these archetypes carry associations readers bring with them.

Use archetypes carefully: recognising one is a starting point, and the interesting analysis is almost always where a text departs from the pattern it invoked.

7

The Function of Contrasts Within a Text

The Function of Contrasts Within a Text

- The differences highlighted by a contrast emphasise particular traits or characteristics in the things contrasted.
- Contrasts often represent conflicts in values related to character, narrator, or speaker perspectives.

8

Identifying the Narrator or Speaker

Identifying the Narrator or Speaker

That distinction – recalling versus relating as they occur – is the first axis of narrative distance below.

9

The Function of Point of View

Four distances between narrator and events

- Narrative distance 叙述距离 refers to the physical distance, chronological distance, relationships, or emotional distance between the narrator and the events or characters.
- Stream of consciousness 意识流 is narration in which a character's thoughts are related through a continuous flow, often with little conventional ordering.

Four distances between narrator and events, in detail

Narrative distance: four separate measurements

CLOSE

DISTANT

The four vary independently - and a narrator who CHANGES one mid-text has made a choice worth explaining.

A narrator's position is not one fact but four, and any of them can be the analysis

The Function of Point of View

- Narrative distance 叙述距离 refers to the physical distance, chronological distance, relationships, or emotional distance between the narrator and the events or characters.
- Stream of consciousness 意识流 is narration in which a character's thoughts are related through a continuous flow, often with little conventional ordering.

10 Details, Diction, and Syntax Reveal Perspective

Details, Diction, and Syntax Reveal Perspective

Narrators' and characters' backgrounds and perspectives shape the tone they convey.

Descriptive words not only qualify what they describe but convey a perspective toward it.

The attitude of a narrator or speaker toward an idea, character, or situation emerges from these choices.

Perspective, from three observables

What is not noticed is evidence too. A narrator who never describes a face has told you something about the narrator

11 Developing a Literary Thesis Statement

Developing a Literary Thesis Statement

Unchanged: a thesis expresses an interpretation and requires textual defence; it may preview the line of reasoning.

12 Developing Commentary

Developing Commentary

- A line of reasoning is the logical sequence of claims defending the thesis, communicated through commentary.
- Body paragraphs develop the reasoning and justify claims using evidence.
- Effective paragraphs are cohesive and often use topic sentences 主题句 to state a claim and explain the reasoning.

13 Selecting Relevant and Sufficient Evidence

Selecting Relevant and Sufficient Evidence

Same four points as Unit 3: evidence used strategically; effective when commentary explains the relationship; sufficient in quantity and quality; and interpretation as a recursive process.

Worked example – narrative distance

A prose fiction prompt asks how narrative choices convey the narrator's attitude to a remembered event.

- Weak: "The narrator is nostalgic and uses descriptive language."
- Scoring: "The narrator relates a single afternoon from a distance of decades, and the distance is doing the work: he describes his own excitement in the third person – 'the boy ran' – before returning to 'I' for the disappointment."

Distance, its variation, and the attitude that variation produces. Choosing where to close the gap is the choice being analysed.

14 Control Over the Elements of Composition

Exam tips

- Choices reveal values. Ask what must have been true for the choice to make sense to that character.
- An antagonist is not a villain. The strongest hold a value the reader can also recognise as good.
- The environment tells you about the character – and it is textual evidence, not speculation.
- Archetypes are a starting point. The analysis is where the text departs from the pattern.
- Narrative distance has four kinds – physical, chronological, relational, emotional. It is the most underused tool here.
- A narrator who closes or opens the distance mid-text has made a choice. Say what it produces.

15 Recap

Unit 4 – key takeaways

1

Choices

reveal values – what must have been true

2

Antagonist

not a villain; may hold a recognisable good

3

Environment

tells you about the character – textual evidence

4

Distance

physical, chronological, relational, emotional

Check yourself

- 1 What do choices reveal?
- 2 Is an antagonist a villain?
- 3 The environment is what kind of evidence?
- 4 Name four kinds of narrative distance.

Answers: values ▪ no ▪ textual, not speculation ▪ physical, chronological, relational, emotional
