The Function of Structure in a Text

Unit 8 is the last poetry unit and it handles the hardest material in the course: the family of devices built on contradiction.

- Ideas and images in a poem may extend beyond a single line or stanza 跨行跨节.
- Punctuation is often crucial to understanding a text.
- When structural patterns are created, any interruption in the pattern creates a point of emphasis 中断即强调.

That third statement is the most efficient reading tool in the course. Establish what the poem has been doing, then find the moment it stops doing it. That moment is where the poem points.

In a poem, a semicolon and a full stop are different claims about how tightly two statements are joined, and a poem without punctuation has made a decision about how you must read it.

The Function of Contrasts Within a Text

What happens to the contradiction? That is the separating question

ANTITHESIS	IRONY	PARADOX
two opposites placed side by side	a mismatch between what is expected and what is	a contradiction that survives inspection
both remain true in their own terms	someone is aware of the gap	the contradiction IS the truth, not an error

"the harvest, and the emptied village"

"a generous year" - after we have seen the cost

"the fuller the barn, the fewer to eat from it"

Calling all three "irony" is the commonest lost mark in this unit.

the distinction this unit turns on

The Function of Contrasts Within a Text

- Juxtaposition may create or demonstrate an antithesis 对立.
- Situational or verbal irony 情境反讽与言语反讽 is created when events or statements are inconsistent with what is expected.
- Paradox 悖论 occurs when seemingly contradictory elements are juxtaposed, but the contradiction – which may be at odds with ordinary logic – reveals a deeper truth.

The Function of Specific Words and Phrases

In this course, ambiguity is a resource.

An essay that identifies a genuinely ambiguous element, explores both readings, and then argues for one is doing exactly what the sophistication point rewards – far more than an essay that pretends the text is simpler than it is.

The Function of a Symbol

A symbol is not free-floating.

Someone in the text is treating that object as meaningful, and asking who attaches this meaning is often more productive than asking what the meaning is.

The Function of a Metaphor

A conceit is an extended metaphor that has been pushed further than seems reasonable, and the strain is deliberate. When analysing one, follow how far the poet takes the comparison and where it starts to resist – the resistance is usually the poem's real subject.

- A conceit 奇喻 is a form of extended metaphor, common in poetry, developing complex comparisons.
- Conceits are often used to make complex comparisons between the natural world and an individual.
- Multiple comparisons, representations, or associations may combine to affect one another in complex ways.

The Function of an Allusion

Note the condition: shared knowledge.

An allusion is a bet on the reader's memory, and a poem that alludes heavily has chosen its audience.

Developing a Literary Thesis, Commentary, and Evidence

- A thesis expresses an interpretation requiring textual defence.
- More sophisticated literary arguments explain the significance or relevance of an interpretation – the sophistication point, stated by the CED.
- Evidence: strategic, effective with commentary, sufficient in quantity and quality, developed recursively.

Exam tips

- Establish the pattern, then find the interruption. The interruption is where the poem points.
- Punctuation is a claim about how tightly statements are joined. A poem without it has made a decision too.
- Antithesis, irony, paradox are not synonyms. Learn the three definitions precisely; conflating them costs marks.
- Ambiguity is a resource. Explore both readings, then argue for one. That is the sophistication point.
- Ask who attaches the meaning to a symbol. It is usually more productive than asking what it means.
- A conceit is a comparison pushed past comfort. Follow it to where it resists – that is the subject.
