Objective

Build the skills to write the context for industrialisation.

You must be able to:

- explain why the state's role differed on the continent
- state the three threads the unit opens
- avoid narrating inventions instead of naming conditions

1 Worked examples

Study these first. Each one shows the method for a task used later.

■ Conditions in Britain

Ready supplies of coal and iron ore; economic institutions and human capital — engineers, inventors, capitalists — acting largely through private initiative; and a parliamentary government that promoted commercial and industrial interests because those interests were represented in it.

■ The continental difference

Industry spread from Britain to the continent, where the state played a greater role in promoting it — subsidy, tariff, direct investment — because private capital and institutions were thinner.

■ The three threads

Spread and the state's role; everyday life shaped by industrialisation depending on the level of development in a particular location; and the ideological, governmental and collective responses to industrialisation's complications.
