KEY WORDS vocabulary 词汇 • building vocabulary 积累词汇

Objective

Build the skills to answer exam questions on building vocabulary 积累词汇 — learning words in a way that makes them available when you write.

You must be able to:

- record a word with the information you will actually need
- use collocation and word families to multiply what one word gives you
- choose a precise word instead of a vague one plus an adverb

1 Worked examples

■ Record more than the translation

A word list of English and Chinese alone will not help you write. Record four things:

Word	Part of speech	Collocation	Your sentence
reluctant	adjective	reluctant to do something	She was reluctant to admit she was lost.
decline	verb	decline an invitation	He declined the invitation politely.

The collocation is what stops you writing reluctant of doing. The preposition is part of the word.

■ Word families multiply one word

decide (v) → decision (n) → decisive (adj) → decisively (adv) → indecisive (adj)

Learning the family costs a few minutes and gives you five words, plus the ability to vary a sentence: He decided quickly → He was decisive.

■ Precision beats intensifiers

Vague + intensifier	Precise
very tired	exhausted
very hungry	starving
very surprised	astonished
very big	enormous
very small	tiny
very good	excellent

An examiner sees very many times a day. A precise word is what earns the vocabulary credit.

■ Learn words from your own reading

The words worth learning are the ones you meet in something you were reading anyway. A word met in context, in a sentence you understood, is remembered; a word from a list of fifty is not.
